

White-fronted Bee-eater

The white-fronted bee-eater is a small brightly coloured bird that lives in Savanah and open country sides near gullies, these little birds form colonies of 200 or so members, nesting in holes dug into cliffs and banks. The white fronted bee-eater is a slender bird with a black mask, white forehead and a bright red throat. You will often see them perched in a low branch waiting for insects or bee's, which they will swoop down and snatch mid-flight.
